

HOMELESS SERVICES UPDATE

HOUSING IS NOT HOMELESS

SEPTEMBER 27, 2016

CONNECTING THE COMMUNITY

- An individual's health is greatly influenced by the social and economic conditions in which they live, work, and play. Safety-net populations often experience a multitude of physical and behavioral health issues stemming from or amplified by psychosocial challenges such as housing instability, unemployment, and food insecurity, which influence access to care and health outcomes.
- There is a growing interest in better coordinating social services, behavioral health, health services, and public health in the safety net to create models of "whole-person care," recognizing that vulnerable individuals often have unmet needs spanning multiple systems.

HOUSING FIRST

- An immediate and primary focus on helping individuals and families quickly access and sustain permanent housing.
- A focused strategy on supporting individuals and families to stay in housing and access health, education, and employment services.
- Need for a comprehensive housing plan to increase the low-income housing inventory.
